Autism Spectrum Disorders Symposium

What you will learn

On March 30, Dr. Hanley will provide attendees with an understanding of why preschoolers and school-age children engage in problem behavior, the classroom conditions under which problem behavior is most likely to develop and persist, and the actions of administrators, teachers, etc. that will prevent the development of the problem behavior. Proactive strategies will be described, and the focus on prevention will include detailed descriptions of class-wide curriculum, small group and individualized programs aimed at promoting social skills that have been shown to compete with the development and persistence of problem behavior.

On March 31, the sessions will deal with developing healthy sleep habits, independence with respect to toileting, and reasonable and reliable levels of compliance in children. These goals are routine challenges for parents and educators of children, including children with autism and other developmental disabilities. The goals of this day are to provide attendees with a sound understanding of factors that worsen and improve children's ability to achieve age-appropriate amounts of sleep, toileting independence and compliance with parental requests and instructions. Effective strategies for families and educators for promoting these skills will be described.

Greg Hanley has been applying the principles of learning to improve socially important behaviors of children and adults with and without disabilities for more than 20 years. He worked and trained at the Spurwink School, the Groden Center, and the Kennedy Krieger Institute, was degreed at the University of Florida, was tenured at the University of Kansas, and is currently an associate professor of psychology and director of the Behavior Analysis Doctoral Program at Western New England College. He is also an adjunct professor of psychiatry at the University of Massachusetts Medical School. Dr. Hanley has published more than 60 articles in peer-reviewed journals in areas such as the assessment and prevention of problem behavior, teaching tactics for young children, and evidence-based values. Dr. Hanley is a Fellow of the American Psychological Association, the editor of Behavior Analysis in Practice, and a past associate editor of The Behavior Analyst, the Journal of Applied Behavior Analysis and Behavior Analysis in Practice.
