Sept. 9 will provide attendees with an understanding as to why preschoolers and early grade school children engage in problem behavior, the classroom conditions under which problem behavior is most likely to develop, and the actions of administrators, teachers, etc. that will prevent the development of problem behavior. Proactive strategies will be described and the focus on prevention will include detailed descriptions of whole class curriculum, small group and individualized programs aimed at promoting social skills that have been shown to compete with the development/persistence of problem behavior

Sept. 10 will deal with developing healthy sleep habits, independence with respect to toileting, and reasonable and reliable levels of compliance in young children. These goals are routine challenges of parents of young children, including children with autism and other developmental disabilities. The goals of this day are to provide attendees with a sound understanding of factors that worsen and improve children's ability to achieve age-appropriate amounts of sleep, toileting independence and compliance with parental requests and instructions. Effective and family-friendly strategies for promoting these skills will be described.
